Management Commentary for April

In April, block 840,000 ushered in Bitcoin's fifth epoch and reduced the issuance of new bitcoin to 3.125 roughly every 10 minutes going forward. After a brief spike in network transaction fees that produced daily revenues well in excess of a typical day prior to the halving, production normalized for the final few days of the month. Against this backdrop, Cipher continued to build its inventory while making good progress on site expansions.

"With the halving behind us, we have finally arrived at the moment Cipher has been anticipating for years, and going forward we look to reap the benefits of our positioning in the market as a low-cost producer," said Tyler Page, CEO of Cipher. "We look forward to updating investors on our operations, financials and growth plans next week on our Q1 2024 earnings call."
